

United Bank just keeps getting better every year. The same wasn't true of its phone system.

Year after year, United Bank remains a shining example of stability, strength and sound management practices. A regional company with dual headquarters in Charleston, W.Va., and Washington, D.C., United has increased its dividend to shareholders for 37 consecutive years.

One of the ways United Bank and its officers have remained good stewards of capital for their customers and shareholders is through the utilization of efficient and effective technology solutions. A perfect example is the ShoreTel Unified Communications infrastructure being implemented with the help of the experts at IPC Technologies.

Recent acquisitions left United Bank with multiple phone systems from different manufacturers across 126 branch offices in four states and Washington, D.C. With IPC's help, United is in the process of standardizing on ShoreTel. With its distributed architecture, ShoreTel is ideal for companies that span multiple locations because it appears and behaves as a single, unified system. What's more, it delivers unmatched reliability, scalability and manageability.
